

Overall SWOT and iteration Analysis:

I think from the beginning it was obvious I was leaning towards chatGBT a little more, it was consistently delivering precise, accurate, relevant, and in my opinion better formatted information. Microsoft CoPilot delivered what was asked as well, as the prompt evolved so did the responses and they were what I was asking though simpler, which isn't always bad. They both had very similar SWOT analyses, and with such a big and developed company that makes sense, their Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, and Threats are pretty well known and with its size I'm sure easier to find and summarize. However, as I added more specifics to the prompt with the career path and position I'm looking for, my interest in the company, and my future goals, I believe ChatGBT was able to tailor to my needs more, giving me optimized and specific information I would need in general and in an interview. Ultimately I'd have to go with ChatGPT for my choice. It showed to be a superior LLM in this instance, helping me with exactly what I needed and giving very helpful advice I could use someday.